Stingray tankers used in clandestine nuclear and chemical weapons testing The technology could also be used against US forces in the Pacific With a name straight out of a Hollywood thriller, the technology deployed by US forces off the Pacific coast reportedly allows a nearby tank or vessel to detect and track any submarine that is equipped with a nuclear missile. Called the Enhanced Nuclear Detection System, the move is aimed to prevent 'rogue' nations from testing and selling nuclear weapons to US enemies, according to the New York Times. Based on a project started in 2008, the programme has been used to detect vessels equipped with nuclear-tipped missiles, and according to a source cited by the outlet, the US military wants to expand it to detect submarines carrying chemical weapons. The source also claimed that the technology used to detect submarines is the same one used to detect test missiles in the skies above the US. The New York Times further claimed that the technology consists of a type of towed sonar system that is capable of "triangulating" the location of a submarine, with the precise identification of the vessel being made through the use of a satellite. As the source confirmed, the system uses satellite imagery of 'blip' (a sonar signal that moves through the water), making it possible for the same location to be detected several times throughout the day. The system can also be used to track submarines out of the water, with sensors being connected to "large aerodynamic pods that could hang just above the water's surface and look down at the ocean floor from above, taking advantage of the lag time in data flow between the satellite and the submarine," according to the source. The source also claimed that an operator would be able to "ping" a vessel from a submarine, even if it was submerged, and that they could spot it for up to 10 minutes. According to the publication, the US military has deployed the technology, but reportedly declined to give any details on the submarine detection system. For its part, the US Navy said that "the Navy does not discuss operational matters," while stressing that it uses the program's capabilities for "defensive purposes." "The Naval Sea Systems Command (NAVSEA) is the Navy's main systems command, where the E-2D Advanced Airborne Reconnaissance System (EAARS

The world cannot exist without children. It's common knowledge that children are the source of laughter, joy, and love, the hope of the future, and the voice of the young. But the future is bright for those who manage to overcome society's hurdles and become genuine leaders of tomorrow, the ones who are able to help families to face the difficulties of raising children. And when the world is transformed, it will be thanks to them. The job of a parent is an incredibly difficult one, but parents are happy, feeling a strong sense of responsibility, love, and self-sacrifice. Parents know that there is nothing more important than their children, and they are committed to becoming a part of their children's lives and futures. Filing the taxes of a family with children is often difficult. It's common to receive an email that says "there are too many children and the rates are too high." Parents have no choice but to create a family that is somehow sustainable and not relying on government subsidies. But it is important that the tax system reflects not only the necessity to support the family, but the happiness of children and bring glory to them. The government budget creates a major problem for the households with children. There is always an enormous pressure on the state and society to reduce the budget deficit. These pressures seem to grow stronger every year and even undermine the development of the entire country. But it is clear that the crisis will never end until it comes to children. In order to solve the crisis of the society as a whole, we will have to sacrifice an important source – the children themselves. What is the state doing to protect children? The state has many programs to help families with children. However, there are many programs that do not meet the demands of modern families, and therefore they fail to help and actively drive families to poverty. Fundamental programs to support families with children have one of the following characteristics: – they are part of the retirement plan – they eliminate the need for an additional income. Many countries have adopted such programs, but in Russia, the situation is different. Unfortunately, Russia has too many people with a pension, and there is not much that can be done about it. The main problem is that the state is not properly helping these people to transition into the next stage of their lives. The main thing is that people with a pension do not need a minimum income
